The United States continues to produce historically high levels of...

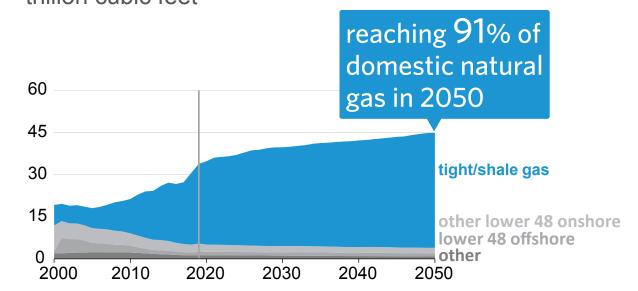

crude oil...

Tight oil development continues to be the main driver of total U.S. crude oil production.

and natural gas.

Dry natural gas production by type trillion cubic feet

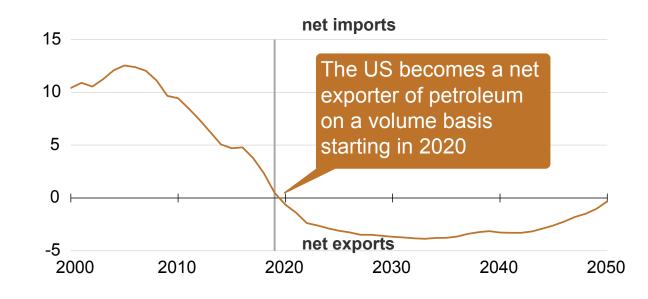

Development of tight and shale resources continues to be the main driver of U.S. dry natural gas production.

Low growth in domestic consumption of these fuels leads to increasing exports of...

crude oil, petroleum products...

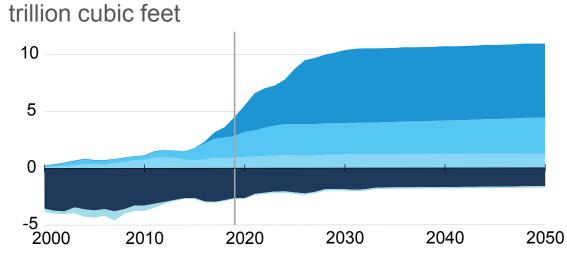

U.S. petroleum and other liquids net imports/exports million barrels per day and liquefied natural gas.

Natural gas trade

Net exports of natural gas from the United States continue to grow because of liquefied natural gas export facilities delivering domestic production to global markets.